

Planning & structuring my doctoral studies

Are you a doctoral candidate who could benefit from structuring your work, having a firmer grip on things and confidence in your research? In this workshop you will explore how to successfully manage your doctoral research as a whole. You will learn the basic theory of project management and apply it to your own doctoral project in practical exercises and discussions.

Furthermore, you will learn how to manage project time and how to communicate within the project team members and with the stakeholders of your project.

More focus, clear priorities, awareness, and more organisation of your work will be the result.

The training will focus on your projects.

We will cover the following topics:

- Basic theory of project management
- Applying basic theory of project management to individual doctoral project
- Practical support in planning and execution of the promotional project
- Time Planning with regard to your research project
