

Online Course: Teaching and Learning for Global Competence

Perhaps you've been in a classroom situation where you've wondered how to accommodate international students with very different levels of knowledge, learning experiences, expectations and goals? Maybe you're contemplating including global perspectives in your course or transitioning to English as the language of instruction, but you're unsure of where to begin?

This course seeks to empower educators like you to navigate the complexities of diverse classrooms and adapt your teaching strategies accordingly.

- Target audience: university teaching staff from all academic disciplines
- Format: Blended Learning, featuring group meetings for interdisciplinary reflection
- Option for self-study: The whole course or individual modules accessible even without a certificate of attendance
